Research, Publication, and Other Professional Activities

Research in Progress and Grant Proposals Currently or Imminently Under Review:

- With colleague Matt Gabel and Cliff Carrubba (Emory), I am working on a project on the sample properties of roll call votes. We know very little about the conditions under which votes are roll called, who is responsible for provoking a roll call, and what reasons they have for requesting a roll call. The sample properties of roll-call votes are critical to determining the quality of the inferences we can draw from observed legislative behavior. We are collecting relevant data from “congressional records” of countries around the globe. This project is being funded by the National Science Foundation (Grant # SES-1066340).
- With former colleagues John Patty and Maggie Penn (Emory), I am working on a project to study bicameral legislatures. Much of our theorizing and much of our empirical work are content to focus on lower chambers. However, the literatures on agenda control, coalition building, and policy stability point to the need to consider how bicameralism works as a system. In addition to advancing theory on bicameralism, we will collect cameral procedures, transcripts of floor minutes, and roll call vote results in the nine upper chambers of Latin America. This project is being funded by the National Science Foundation (Grant # SES-1227186).
- With Matt Gabel (WUSTL), Terry Jones (UMSL), and Jonathan Rodden (Stanford), I am working on a project about the impact of electoral rules on race and representation in U.S. school boards and city councils. The use of multiple non-transferable vote (MNTV) systems to elect school boards has been blamed for the under-representation of blacks. Lawsuits brought by the ACLU and NAACP have advocated the use of single-member districts decided by plurality (SMDP) as a remedy for this supposed shortcoming. SMDP rules are used to elect U.S. city councils. In this project we will follow demographic shifts across communities in St. Louis county for a 50-year period to determine how the racial composition of electoral districts interacts with electoral rules to determine the racial composition of elected bodies. Seed money in the form of an Impact Grant from the Weidenbaum Center is supporting our work while we pursue external funding.
- With Patrick Cunha (Loyola), Santiago Olivella (UNC), and colleague Guillermo Rosas, I am writing a book entitled Representation and Electoral Systems: Interparty and Intraparty Politics. We use seven electoral rules that are part of all electoral systems to place those systems in a two-dimensional space based on the incentives they create for relations between parties (their number, size, and location in the ideological space) and within parties (constituency service, campaign content, party discipline, pork barrel v. programmatic policies, etc.). The book is aimed at an upper-division undergraduate audience and would also be ideal as a framework and initial weekly reading for a graduate seminar. This project is being funded by the National Science Foundation (Grant # SES- 2048540).
